NEW CANDLE SHADES.

EVOLUTION OF THE SHADE—LATEST IN CANDLESTICKS.

An Effective Combination Fernery and Candle Holder—Moorish, Jeweled and Other Up to Date Candle Shades—Quaint Candlesticks of Silver, Brass and Iron.

The innovation of the pretty candle accessories known as shades was, of course, a woman's invention. As rumor has it, evening after evening one of society's favorites sat chafing at the crude yellow flame of the numerous candles, feeling that every line in her face was being revealed with unbecoming distinctness. Finally an inspiration came. She procured silk and bristol board and covered the shade, which is now a necessity for candles for the banquet table, the parlor, or wherever a soft, effective light is desired.

In a sketch of the very latest styles in candle shades The Standard Designer illustrates some pretty up to date table decorations, including a combination fernery and candelabra for the center or side pieces of a table.

A rose pink candle springs from a half opened cluster of ferns in shining silver which contrasts well with the deep pink of the silk shade. The candle holder is securely attached to an oval fernery which forms the base of this attractive decoration. The flower holders on either side are of rose colored glass, with silver standards. The shade in this instance is perhaps one of the easiest to manufacture and may be of crape paper or of silk. Ice crape is also very pretty for this style of work, as it is crinkly and has almost an accordion plaited effect. The metal candle shade frames or holders can be bought at the stores for 10 cents. If the holder only is in use, bristol board or hat wire must be used to mount the shade. First make a ring of wire the exact size of the round top of the candle holder. Then form another ring considerably larger than the first. Four pieces of wire, about 4 or 5 inches long, should then be attached to the upper and lower rings, much after the order of an umbrella's ribs. Having completed this skeleton frame, gather the silk top and bottom and attach it to the wire rings.

When transparent fabrics, such as chiffon or mousseline de soie, are employed for the shades, they should be mounted on very thin bristol board cut circular in shape and joined in the back by tiny brass headed nails.

An effective candlestick is one of silver with leaflike decoration. It is crowned by a shade of Moorish design. This shade is made of satin covered cardboard painted in a scroll design and thickly set with small imitation gems. The fringe ornamenting the edge is composed entirely of crystal beads in every imaginable color. This shade, as may be imagined, is one of the most beautiful of those imported this year, and yet it may be made very easily.

Another odd candlestick is wrought iron and brass. A shade of scarlet satin, enriched with colored jewels and outlined with gold thread, makes a glittering and appropriate capping for the red candle, which is held in place by the brazen tail of a diminutive dragon. A very handsome one is a candlestick of filigree brass, with its shade of cerise china silk, cut in deep points and shirred on a foundation of coarse, stiff crinoline. The lower edge is ornamented by a fringe of beadwork. Clever women will make numerous variations, modifications and additions, with the aid of the foregoing models.
